For employers looking to recruit IU School of Public Health-Bloomington students, we're available to assist in a variety of ways to ensure you are meeting with the students who match your job and internship openings best.

Assist with recruiting – Our team works one-on-one with employers to understand their needs and ideal qualities in candidates for jobs and internships, and then helps to match employers with students in our school. We offer a variety of recruiting opportunities and work with employers to customize services.

On-campus interviews – Employers are invited to set up interviews on-campus throughout the academic year. We work with employers to make dedicated space available for interviews and work to ensure you're able to meet and connect with the students you see as candidates for your open positions.

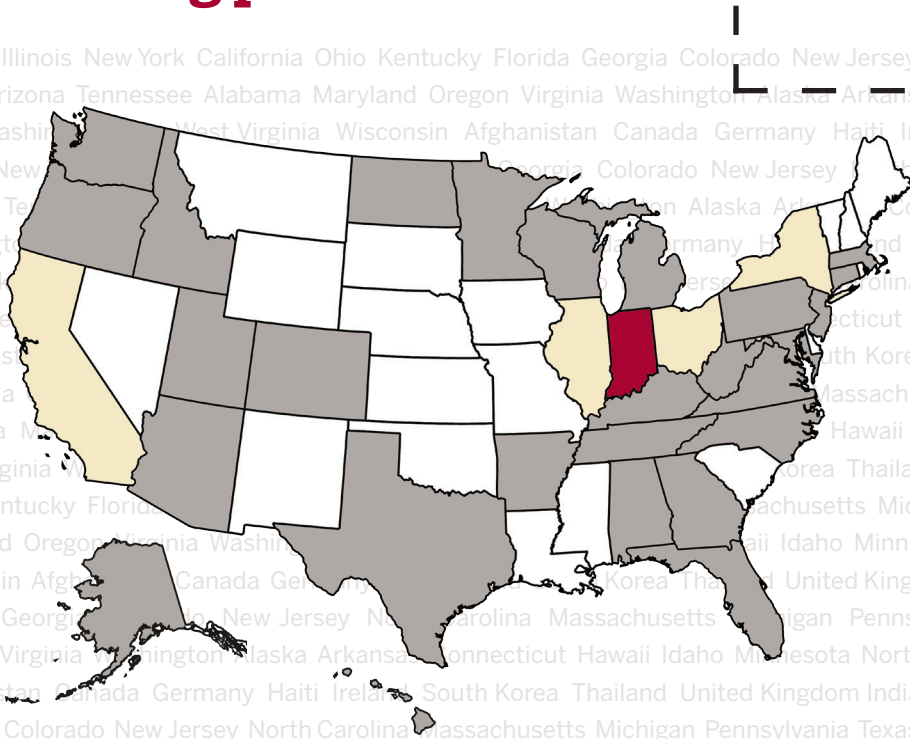

Career fairs – We host more than a half dozen career fairs each academic year and invite employers to participate in any or all of these opportunities. We offer a Fall Career Expo in partnership with the IU School of Public and Environmental Affairs, a summer camp jobs fair, and a variety of fairs based on industry, such as a fitness and wellness career fair, and a hospitality, tourism and recreation career fair.

On-campus events – We're always looking for employers willing to come to campus and be part of panel discussions, networking events, employer office hours and information sessions for our students. This is a great way for both students and employers to network, and allows students to learn more about a company, job and field.

Job/internship postings – Career Link is our free job and internship posting site available to students in the IU School of Public Health-Bloomington. Employers may advertise approved job or internship postings here at no cost, and can determine the deadline and application method for each posting.

Partnership opportunities – We offer several ways employers can stand out among the crowd and partner with our office on events. We offer partnership opportunities for career fairs, career programs and workshops, and networking trips. In addition, our Employer Spotlight is a featured blog article written by the employer or a student blogger that gives an overview of the organization, showcases any alumni working there, and outlines any positions available.

Reimagining Public Health

The Indiana University School of Public Health-Bloomington has a long history of innovation and celebrated achievements across an array of academic fields in health, wellness and preventive health. With our unique, comprehensive approach, we're enhancing and expanding the concept of public health to include a wide array of fields that enhance quality of life.

Best of the Best

We know our faculty and programs are outstanding, and give our students the tools and knowledge they need to build a successful career in public health. This level of excellence is demonstrated through our accreditation by the Council on Education for Public Health (CEPH), the nationally-recognized accrediting body for both schools of public health and public health programs.

Graduating from an accredited school better positions students to compete successfully for the best career opportunities, and assists in recruiting top faculty and staff to our school. The CEPH seal ensures School of Public Health-Bloomington students have received quality training and education, and are capable of undertaking a broad range of professional responsibilities in a variety of disciplines.
